

A PARENT'S GUIDE

Dyslexia & Reading

Why reading can be such a battle, and simple ways to help your child love stories again.

Dyslexia is a common, language-based difference that makes accurate, fluent reading and spelling harder, because the brain processes the sounds in words differently. It is not about intelligence or effort, and it is not a problem with the eyes. Around one in ten people is dyslexic, and taught the right way, these children absolutely can learn to read well.

Signs you might recognise

- ✓ Reads slowly and with effort, far below how well they talk
- ✓ Guesses words from the first letter or the picture
- ✓ Muddles similar letters or words (b/d, was/saw)
- ✓ Struggles to sound out (decode) unfamiliar words
- ✓ Avoids reading aloud, or tires quickly
- ✓ Spells the same word different ways on one page

What you can do at home

- Read TO them every day. Share stories above their own reading level. Keep a love of books alive even while decoding is still hard.
- Use audiobooks alongside print. Hearing rich stories builds vocabulary and confidence without the decoding battle.
- Play with sounds. Rhyming games, clapping syllables, and 'what sound does it start with?' build the phonics foundation reading needs.
- Keep practice short, daily and kind. Ten focused, encouraging minutes beats an hour of frustration.
- Never put them on the spot. Avoid surprise reading aloud in front of others; let them prepare first.
- Celebrate their strengths. Many dyslexic children shine at art, building, storytelling and problem-solving. Make sure they hear it.

Confidence is fragile here. Protecting it matters as much as the reading itself.

When it's worth seeking support

Consider reaching out if, over time, you notice:

- › Slow, effortful reading that isn't improving
- › Strong avoidance of reading or writing
- › A family history of dyslexia or reading difficulty
- › A clear gap between how your child speaks and how they read

How The Lodestone Centre can help

We begin with an optional screening, then teach reading explicitly, sound by sound, using a structured, multi-sensory approach (Orton-Gillingham). We build decoding, fluency, spelling and comprehension, and rebuild confidence alongside.

Programs that often help: Reading & Literacy Program, Screening, SEL Program, Progressive Coding, IGCSE Crash Course.
