

A PARENT'S GUIDE

When Your Child Learns at Their Own Pace

Some children just need more time, and the right teaching. Here's how to help.

A child who learns more slowly isn't a failure, and isn't lazy. Often they simply haven't been taught in the way that works for them, and in a fast, one-size-fits-all classroom they quietly fall behind. Given patience, the right pace and a strengths-first approach, the same child can make real, lasting progress, and start to believe in themselves again.

Signs you might recognise

- ✓ Takes longer to grasp new ideas, then forgets them quickly
- ✓ Falls a little further behind each year despite trying
- ✓ Needs lots of repetition before something sticks
- ✓ Is losing confidence ('I'm just not clever')
- ✓ Copes one-to-one, but gets lost in a busy class
- ✓ Works hard, but the results don't show it

What you can do at home

- Go slower and smaller. Break learning into tiny steps and master one before moving on. Small wins build momentum.
- Repeat, little and often. Review yesterday before adding anything new. Spaced repetition helps things stick.
- Use lots of senses. See it, say it, do it, draw it. The more ways in, the better the memory.
- Connect it to real life. Tie learning to your child's interests and everyday moments so it feels meaningful, not abstract.
- Measure against themselves. Celebrate progress from where your child was, not against the class. Effort over outcome, always.

- Stop before frustration. Keep sessions short and positive. Ending on a win matters more than finishing the page.

Belief is the engine. Rebuild confidence and the learning follows.

When it's worth seeking support

Consider reaching out if, over time, you notice:

- › Falling further behind despite genuine effort
- › Confidence and motivation dropping away
- › Needing far more repetition than peers
- › A worry it could be something specific (a screening can check)

How The Lodestone Centre can help

We slow things down, find and fill the gaps from the bottom up, and teach in the way your child learns best, in small groups, with the patience and encouragement that rebuild skills and self-belief. An optional screening finds the real gaps first.

Programs that often help: Screening, Reading & Literacy Program, Math Program, SEL Program, Lodestone Evo.
